The new Autumn Hats show a tendency towards large shapes.

The question of the moment isn't it. The color, shape and material of your fall hat, uncommonly smart looking with the correct, refining touch, almost all are individual, and range all the way from a small hat one wears with a suit, to the broader brimmed creations seen on dress occasions.

STRIKERS USE VIOLENCE.

Shopmen Are Giving Trouble In Vicinity of Chicago.

CHICAGO, Sept. 4.—The disorders [illegible] were marked by an attempt to blow up a train, the burning and dynamiting of bridges and other railway property, greasing of tracks, slugging of workers, and other acts of lawless violence, marked the strike of the railroad shopmen throughout the country Saturday.

A pile of debris heaped in the path of an expected Chicago train near Sprink Lake, Iowa, was reported to have resulted in the death of one man and the injury of three others when a motor hand-car on which they were riding in advance of the train struck the obstruction.

An attempt to blow up a Chicago and Alton train near Alton, Ills., the bombing of a bridge in Wilmington, Del., and the burning of seven bridges on the "Cotton Belt" road were reported simultaneously with the arrest of three men in Chicago charged with a plot to dynamite and wreck the New York-Chicago Western Express of the New York Central Lines.

Railroad detectives, posing as strikers, obtained the first information concerning the alleged plot. According to the investigators, the wreck was first supposed to take place Tuesday, but the arrest of the four men in connection with the Gary outrage postponed the execution of the plot.

Wholesale arrests of terrorists was promised by the police in Chicago, while Federal agents continued their activity in all parts of the Central West.

Despite the wide extent of the day's outbreaks and the heavy property loss, few injuries were reported. At Sedalia, Mo., four railroad guards were beaten by thugs.

GHOST MADE TROUBLE.

House Was Wrecked by People Seeking Treasure.

NEW YORK, Sept. 4.—Mrs. Alice Allen, negress, who lives at Varet street and Broadway, Brooklyn, but who, until three months ago, lived at 1587 Atlantic avenue, believes she had a dream last Tuesday night that the ghost of Diedrick Hinecke came to her and told her he had hidden $19,000 in the building on Atlantic avenue, which is now being torn down.

Hinecke formerly owned a saloon in the building and died in the saloon. After his death, Mrs. Allen moved in. The "Ghost," according to Mrs. Allen, like Hamlet's, made a date for the following night, promising to meet her in the ruins and point out to her the hidden $19,000.

Mrs. Allen could not keep the good news to herself and spread it all over the neighborhood. As a result fully 500 persons, according to the police, were with her when she went to keep the rendezvous. The police reserves were called out from the Atlantic avenue station to keep order.

No ghost appeared, but when the wrecking crew came to work next morning they found their work nearly done. The ghost diggers had practically completed the wreck of the old house.

LACROSSE

DESERONTO 2. NAPANEE 1

The first game of lacrosse played in Napanee in thirty-five years was played Wednesday afternoon last at the Napanee Driving Park at four o'clock. The two teams paraded to the grounds, headed by the Napanee Citizens' Band.

Napanee's new lacrosse team, the Maple Leafs, and Deseronto Leaders lined up, and the spectators witnessed a[n] interesting game of lacrosse. [illegible] playing together as a team, the Napanee team, of only five weeks' experience, and many of whom had not seen a lacrosse stick to that date, surprised the spectators, and out-speeded and out-checked their opponents, and in the last quarter had possession of the ball the best part of the time but failed to tie the score.

The Deseronto boys are a snappy bunch, and have played this season against such good teams as Campbellford, Havelock, and Cornwall, but Wednesday witnessed their hardest and closest game.

To many of the spectators, who had never witnessed a game of lacrosse, the play seemed rough in spots, but the players received only a few minor bruises.

The game throughout was featured with brilliant plays, and the large crowd were well satisfied and assured the boys of their support and attendance at their next game.

Napanee plays a return game at Deseronto Fair, Sept. 27th.

The teams lined up as follows: Deseronto — Goal, Hopping; Point, Wagar; Cover Point, Perry; 1st Defence, Fraser; 2nd Defence, Bremer; Centre, Whitten; 1st Home, Burley; 2nd Home, Cole; Outside Home, Miracle; Inside Home, Green; spare, Provins.

Judge of play, M. Whitton; Goal Umpire, C. Kettle.

THE NAPANEE FAIR

Don't fail to come to the Napanee Fair
By land, by water or by air,
For all the people will be there;
The great and small, the dark and fair.

You'll say its great when you compare
This show with others, far and wide, and near,
And you'll be certain to declare
It surely leaves them in the rear.

Three days the gates will open wide,
To hold the crowds from country side,
Who in their automobiles ride;
Forget all cares till eventide.

So bring your wife and children all,
Perhaps they'd like to see baseball
The great exhibit in the hall,
The named race, the free-for-all.

Bring in your exhibition, too,
The other fellows may be few,
And let your neighbors know that you
Have seen the early morning dew.

The pumpkin and the mighty squash
Will be arranged so some wise
Will say, it isn't fair, by gosh,
That prize is mine, or I am quashed.

And when the exhibition's o'er,
To merry dance hall you repair,
And trip the light fantastic there,
The climax to a grand affair.

Notable Marksman Passes.

MONTREAL, Sept. 4.—With the death of Angus Cameron, which occurred on Thursday at 3269 Verville street, this city, in his 72nd year, there passed one of the most notable marksmen of the last generation. For ten years, between 1870 and 1880, his name ranked among the leading shots of his native Scotland, and among the individual prizes won by him were the Maltese Cross and the St. George's Cross, the latter from a field of 3,000 competitors. He came to Montreal 35 years ago.

Long Distance a Saving

Not an Expense

"What is this charge for $21.60 for Long Distance telephoning in your expense account?" said the Sales Manager of the Blank Manufacturing Company to one of their wide-awake salesmen, "Pretty steep, isn't it?"

"Depends on how you look at it. I thought you might raise some question, so I figured out how much actual saving for the firm that Long Distance telephoning represented:—4 days salary, $40.83, Railroad fares $18.70, Hotel $15.00, a total of $74.53. Deducting the $21.60 you have an actual cash saving to the firm of $52.93—to say nothing of the extra sales I made in the time saved."

More and more sales and accounting officials are beginning to realize that instead of being an extra expense, Long Distance actually saves money and valuable time when intelligently used.

"Use the Bell to Sell"—or to buy. Most good salesmen realize that Station-to-Station calls often answer just as well as the more expensive Person-to-Person messages.

Trade With United States.

In coming to closer grips with the question of possible trade relations between the United States and Canada, says Sir George E. Foster in the North American Review, we must accept as a basis the facts above mentioned. These summarized are that, geographically and climatically, both countries along a wide range of contiguous territory produce similar commodities and generally in surplus quantities; that each country has the easiest and quickest recourse to very important sources of supply in the other; that both countries have their tariffs on the principle of protection and the practice of preferential treatment within the family; that both have strong aspirations towards national growth and development and thus combine national and economic considerations in per determination of their fiscal policy, and, while freely acknowledging these fundamentals and being guided thereby, both peoples have the most cordial friendship towards each other and a desire to do the largest amount of trade with each other possible under conditions as detailed above.

PARLIAMENTARY LETTER

Liberals of Toronto heard one of the most stirring speeches last week that they have listened to in a long time, when they entertained Rt. Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, the Prime Minister, at a great banquet in the King Edward Hotel. Sincere and thoughtful in its preparation, logical in its conclusions and earnest in its delivery, the Prime Minister struck a high note throughout and laid before the people of Toronto and of Canada the things which his government is striving to do for the betterment of the country and of the Canadian people as a whole.

"There is such a thing as too much government," Mr. King declared, "and we have had our share of it of late, in common with the rest of the world. With a national debt of over two billions, and a population not yet nine millions, the less we have of government that can be avoided and the more of immigration that can be obtained, the better for the state and every taxpayer in that state."

After referring to the memories which the occasion stirred in him and expressingg his great gratitude for the honors extended to him as leader of the Liberal party, the Prime Minister said in part: "Perhaps I cannot more fittingly seek to fulfill what may be expected of me on this occasion than briefly to review the fortunes of our party during the last three years, and say a word as to the principles in accordance with which I have sought to discharge the responsibilities of leadership—the leadership of our party in opposition, and the still greater responsibility of leadership of the government of our country, to which the Liberal party is again entrusted."

The spirit which has guided him in his efforts as leader, said Mr. King, was the spirit of unity and good-will of which the 1919 National Liberal Convention had been such an outstanding expression. The Prime Minister reviewed the past history of the great Liberal party; its defeat in 1911 on a great issue. Had the course of world events been other than it was, it was probable, Sir Wilfrid Laurier would have been returned to power in 1917. Between the war and Unionism, the Tory party had got a lease of life it could not otherwise have hoped for. For three years the Tories had ignored Liberal patriotism and co-operation and then to save themselves, had taken Liberals into the fold. The wonder was that the Liberal forces survived and re-united as they had done. After the war had come the revival of true Liberalism, and a great party had sprung from it.

Rt. Hon. Mr. King pointed out that it was during the Tory rule that a third party sprung up, and third parties had always previously been born under Toryism. There were divisions in the Liberal ranks through the events of those trying days, and it was to revive, to re-build and to restore, that Sir Wilfrid Laurier looked around the idea of the Winnipeg Convention, which unfortunately he had not lived long enough to see.

"If there was need for unity before the war, how much greater is that need for unity now after all the differences and divisions the war has wrought," the Prime Minister declared; "if, before the war, good-will was essential between the many diverse elements of which our country is composed, how indifinitely greater is the need for good-will today, after all the ill-will that the war has served to breed."

Rt. Hon. Mr. King had only one criticism to make of his political opponent, Rt. Hon. Arthur Meighen, and that was that his whole attitude was one of ill-will. He showed a poignancy of bitterness, and was "a poor loser." Mr. Meighen forgot that it was the people of Canada and not the political party he was with against votes which cast him out of office.

"We did not wait until parliament met to seek to remove the causes of discord and the differences which have kept apart elements in our country which should have been working together in the common good," said the Prime Minister in explaining how his government had sought to carry out good-will. The general elections had disclosed a Liberal east and a Progressive west. I made it known immediately that a united, and not a divided Canada, would be the supreme aim of the new administration, and I sought to effect this by an attitude of good-will towards those who had opposed us in the contest, but nevertheless were one with us in the fundamental purposes of overthrowing autocracy and restoring representative and responsible government." The offer of seats in the Cabinet had been made to Progressive leaders, who at the time had declined. They had, however, voiced their determination of supporting the government in the carrying out of Liberal and Progressive policies, and had acted in accordance with that profession.

"I think the experience of a session has been sufficient to disclose that neither the Liberals nor the Progressives have anything in common with the Tory Opposition" Rt. Hon. Mr. King declared, and I think it has helped to demonstrate the greater relative advantage to each of a closer union in seeking to carry out the aims we have in common.

The west had been given Cabinet representation, Mr. King pointed out, Hon. Charles Stewart having been chosen from Alberta and Hon. W. R. Motherwell from Saskatchewan. The former had been elected by a Quebec constituency. "He sits to-day as the representative of the constituency of Argenteuil, in the Province of Quebbec, but as the Minister for Alberta in the Federal Cabinet," said Mr. King, in paying tribute to the people of Quebec for this evidence of their goodwill toward the people of a sister providence.

The spirit of a good-will has been manifest ever since the Liberal government took office. It was shown during the session and in the determination of the government to be guided by the will of parliament and the people rather than by seeking to force its will upon parliament. Mr. King emphasized the government's attitude with regard to the Wheat Board question, railway rate revisions, and other matters. These had been dealt with in a manner to accommodate, not to antagonize the particular classes most affected by them. The getting back to Liberal principles in the control of national affairs had meant a great consideration for the rights of minorities and a greater consultation of the wishes of the people and parliament than had been known under Tory rule.

The Prime Minister referred at some length to the shifting of burdens during the war to the broader shoulders of the Federal authorities by the provinces and municipalities. Out of this had grown a tendency to rush to the Federal government on almost any pretext. Referring to the call for troops in Nova Scotia he pointed out that the protection of property and civil rights were assigned to the provincial authorities. The law prescribed the conditions under which the militia should be ordered out and made the provincial authorities financially and otherwise responsible. "We shall have to amend our constitution and the spirit of it," said Mr. King, if, whenever industrial disputes arise and the militia can be called loud enough, the Department of National Defence is to be looked to for the supply of military, naval or air forces."

The Prime Minister referred also to the fuel situation. During the war there had been dictation by the government, and now many people looked to the Federal government to step in and take further control. But the provinces had been given certain rights, which carried with them certain responsibilities. It was not for the Federal government to usurp provincial authority to see that their respective rights and powers were exercised in accordance with the spirit of the constitution, co-operating wherever possible to bring about a truer harmony and a wider unity among the several geographic elements of the Dominion.

As a final word the Prime Minister pointed out that there were times when a measure or a programme meant that the government in question was taking the best course in the interest of all in development of self-government of the elements meant a drawing closer of the whole into a better dominion or a better empire as the case might be, and too much government had become an ill from which the people of Canada were anxious to escape at this time.

Profit From Peat.

A little-known, yet profitable, industry is peat-cutting, which is carried on in many parts of Ireland.

Work usually begins at the bogs at the end of April. The skilled cutter, who has two men with low sideless wheelbarrows in attendance, uses a kind of spade, called a slane, the sods being cut up and removed to dry land.

A few days later, when the sods have become a little less brittle, they are spread carefully all over the ground and left to dry. The next step is to pile the turf into a skilfully-made heap, which allows the wind to pass between the different pieces. Usually it is two or three months before the peat are ready for use as fuel.

Peat is used in Ireland to such an extent that few people in the country districts ever burn coal. The odor of peat is healthy and pleasant, and it gives out neither fumes nor dirt.

Making a Harbor.

Work has been begun on a Jamaica bay improvement which will provide a harbor large enough to hold the harbors of Liverpool, London, Rotterdam and Hamburg. Six 1,000-foot piers are about to be constructed and the necessary channels will be dredged to accommodate the largest boats. The piers alone will cost $750,000,000.

First Military Band.

The first military band was heard in England in 1745. The Duke of York, son of George III., imported a band of twelve German musicians, with three negroes, and established them as the band of the Coldstream Guards. Other regiments then formed bands on similar lines. The negroes continued to form part of the bands until 1838.

Honored Career in Police Court

Not all the tragedies of a growing city are chronicled in the records of the local police court, but yet there is one place where one perhaps finds the greatest and the realest of human tragedies. On the bench of the murky, grimy, dingy and cramped court room in Carling street London, Ontario, five magistrates have sat in unquestioned sway within the past three decades, but for 29 long years the same police court clerk, John Moule, has recorded the complaints of the oppressed, the excuses of wrong-doers and the deliberations and decisions of justice.

Mr. Moule, who celebrated his 69th birthday last May, was appointed clerk of the London police court on October 2, 1893. He was born in London, and as a boy worked as a clerk in the grocery store kept by his father, the late John Moule, senior. When his father died, Mr. Moule continued the business for upwards of twenty years. He was a ward alderman for several years, representing west and northwest London in the city council, and for some time a member of the Victoria Hospital trustee board, and also chairman of the Board of Health. Always a friend of the charitable institutions of the city, in one year alone he distributed $2,000 of his own private means among them.

Before his membership in the Board of Health, little attention was paid to the cleanliness and sanitation of restaurants and sources of food supply, and an important step in this direction was made by Mr. Moule, who inaugurated the inspection of city dairies.

He succeeded John M. Keary as police court clerk, and the five magistrates under whom he has served are the late J. E. Parkes, the late Francis Love, Joseph C. Judd, now junior county judge of Middlesex; A. M. Graydon, and the present acting magistrate, P. H. Bartlet.

Twenty-nine years in police court work is likely to give one a fairly accurate insight into the character and reliability of the quarrelsome, dissipated, dependent and unfortunate characters who constitute the daily grist for the Carling street mill of justice. And now when some sadder and wiser celebrant wakes up after a night of carousing to find himself charged with an infraction of the Ontario Temperance Act, and all his money gone, it is usually Mr. Moule who decides whether he can be trusted to pay his fine if released to return to work in the meantime.

"Will you give me a little time, your worship?" asks the credit-seeking prisoner.

"How about it, Mr. Moule" says the magistrate, and nearly always, after a few preliminary questions, the reply of the clerk is, "Oh, I guess it will be alright."

And very, very rarely, perhaps not once a year even, is this confidence of Police Court Clerk Moule in the goodness and honesty of humanity at heart, abused.

Of course, many of those to whom trust is thus extended, have occasion again and again to ask for time to pay, but few if any will venture on a fresh carousal before they have finished paying the magistrate's assessment upon a preceding one.

Few men have a better opportunity to size up the working efficiency of Ontario's prohibition law than Mr. Moule, but on this reform, the veteran Police court clerk speaks with due reserve of judgment. Prohibition has checked some evils, he declares. In fact it has changed the complexion of the ordinary run of police court cases very materially, and on the whole he believes that prohibition is a good thing. But it has its defects and shortcomings, and necessarily its attendant crop of new evils to contend with.

Domestic troubles are the hardest cases to deal with through the police court, he believes, and his opinion is especially valuable, because he hears all such family disputes before they come before the magistrate at all. And Mr. Moule in such cases always tries to play the role of the domestic peace-maker. If such cases can be settled out of court at all, he uses his best powers of persuasion and advice to induce a settlement. But many cases cannot be settled out of court, the parties concerned resisting all advice against the public airing of their marital difficulties in the open court.

Present day conditions of living, Mr. Moule blames for the increasing number of non-support, wife-desertion and family jangling cases entered on the Forest City's blotter. Wages of the workingman do not go as far as they used to go in providing food and shelter, and Mr. Moule also is inclined to believe that the wives of to-day are not as good household managers as wives were in days gone by. He is not a very strong advocate of juvenile court reforms, for he claims that with a child population of 12,000 or more, London has a low percentage of juvenile court cases, probably not more than 300 a year.

All those cases are heard in the magistrate's private office and the young delinquents do not pass through the courtroom at all until the regular court sessions have been concluded and the adult prisoners removed.—Toronto Sunday World.

OUR CANADIAN GUIDES

THEY ARE AMONG THE GREATEST IN THE WORLD.

The Man of French Extraction, Who Has In His Veins the Blood of the Coureurs de Bois Wins Special Admiration From the Man Who Has Been Studying Them.

Discouring in the Nineteenth Century about Canadian guides, it is the man of French extraction, the descendant of Parkman's coureurs de bois, whom John Murray Gibbon most admires. The type is noted for courage, strength and endurance Joe, with a pack of 300 pounds, "walked faster than I could walk with nothing but a fishing rod." There was Joseph Paul, guide for the Northwest Company, who picked up a sugar barrel filled with bullets by a playful storekeeper, "and let it fall on the counter, smashing the woodwork to pieces and breaking the barrel so that the bullets spilled into the cellar." When the bush Joe had an appetite that matched his strength. A gargauuan eater was he: Fifteen eggs a day, five to each meal; bacon, fish, pork and beans, steaks and flapjacks. "Then he complained that he could not eat because of indigestion." If the French-Canadian guide is so brave and hardy, and wears so well, it is because he comes of heroic stock. To the end of the French dominion in Canada no English names stand out in the opening up of the wilderness. It was the colonists of New France who sailed up the St. Lawrence, explored the Mattawa, pushed into Lake Nipissing, portaged down into the Great Lakes, and were soon trading on the Mississippi and the Missouri, while the English colonists still hugged the seaboard, says the New York Times.

The Frenchmen hunted, trapped and were one with the Indians, whose women they lived with. After the passing of New France there is a procession of English and Scottish explorers in the chronicles of the time: Samuel Hearne, Sir Alexander Mackenzie, Simon Fraser, David Thompson, Sir George Simpson, Milton and Cheadle. The Rev. A. G. Morice in his "Dictionnaire Historique des Canadiens de l'Quest" asks who did the hard work of the expeditions led by these travelers and promoters. The answer is, the voyageurs, who had penetrated and mapped the wilderness and were brothers of the Indian.. Simon Fraser owed much of his success to the half-breed, Jean Baptiste Boucher, known as Waccan by the Crees. On three expeditions Charles Legace was the guide and interpreter for David Thompson. The Hudson Bay Company found Alexis Bonami Lesperance indispensable as driver of its bateaux in the fur trade, a man as strong as a bear and of a vitality no hardships could wear down. Toussaint Charbonneau, a guide of the Northwest Company, was on all explorers' lists in the early part of the nineteenth century. For river service one French-Canadian, John Jacob Astor declared, was worth three Americans. In Parkman's "Oregon [illegible]" the French woodsman and voyageur are deservedly honored. Mr. Gibbon says that the French woodsman of the present day is admirably depicted in the Francois Paradis of Louis Hemon's "Maria Chapdelaine."

There are also sterling guides among the men of British descent.

"If any one," says Mr. Gibbon, "were to ask a New Brunswicker who is the best-known native of the province, he would probably name the guide, Henry Braithwaite, who, in spite of over 80 years, still calls and tracks the moose with the energy of youth." Other famous guides in New Brunswick not of French blood are Arthur Moore, Arthur Pringle, Harry Allen and Claude Knapp, names well known to American sportsmen. A character whom Mr. Gibbon met on the Upper Tobique was Van. He had built a cabin near a lake round which there was a large clearing.

"Must have taken some work to clear this bush," I remarked. "Not a bit," he said. "All it cost me was a little salt. It was the devil that did it—a shot of salt at the root of each bush, and they cleared up the whole yard."

The Canadian guides respect themselves, and must be treated as equals by the rich sportsman, "even though they may cut courtesy serve you first at the campfire and sit at a separate mess." Their scorn for a valet, or any other satellite, is unpardonable. A silent lot of men, one must be careful not to intrude upon their reserve. In Quebec most of the licensed guides are French-Canadians, half-breeds or Indians. Ontario attracts 25,000 non-resident anglers every year. "For the Indian the Anglo-Saxon guide in Ontario has frequently a good-humored but not well-justified contempt." The Indian cooks poorly, is none too clean, but he's the better hunter. "The, Indian," said a Scots guide "never seems to get lost. I guess the Lord gave him the sense of location."

Mr. Gibbon has found the Rocky Mountain guides to have much to do with pack horses, the most original and robust in profanity, but it is to be said for them that their "capacity for swearing is more than equalled by their capacity for hard work." The sportsman's paradise is in the northern areas of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, for there the moose are abundant, black bear are numerous, fish swarm in lakes and streams and caribou roam in herds. The local guides are rough diamonds, but fine fellows. These Canadian guides," the writer says in conclusion, "represent the most virile element in North America, and deserve more recognition than it is usually their fortune to obtain."

Nights on the Sahara desert are often bitterly cold.

Clean to handle. Sold by all Druggists, Grocers and General Stores

Butter From a Fish.

It is not generally known that the Indians of British Columbia and Alaska obtain their butter from a fish known to scientists as the oolichan. It is from six to eight inches long and very fat.

Every summer this fish comes from the ocean up the rivers to spawn, like salmon. Millions are taken in nets. First they are thrown into rough bing made of cedar logs, where they lie for a few days to soften in the sun.

Then they are placed in great cedar vats of boiling water, the latter being heated by hot stones which are dropped into them. This primitive method of heating has been found to produce better butter than when the fish are boiled in the more orthodox fashion.

As the oil rises to the top it is skimmed off. It hardens quickly and has the appearance of lard. Beautifully white, it is not easy to detect it from butter, there being not the slightest odor of fish about it. The Indians pack it in water-tight cedar boxes, making enough of this fish butter during the summer months to last them throughout the year.

Taught Celebrities.

To have been the teacher of Miss Agnes McPhail, M.P., E. F. Gaunty, the brilliant Canadian journalist, and other noted Ontarians, is the distinction of C. A. Mayberry, principal of Stratford Collegiate Institute, who has just celebrated the fortieth anniversary of his entrance into the teaching profession. He has been principal of the Stratford School since 1891, and taught there previously three years under the direction of the previous headmaster, Principal McGregor, whose course of office began with the foundation in 1853, of this school, which also numbers among its graduates Prof. McLennan, of Toronto University; R. Home Smith, of Toronto; and Hon. Peter Smith, Provincial Treasurer.

The Penguins.

The penguins of the Antarctic regions are the most human of all the bird family, walking upright and living in communities, quite unafraid of man.

A HEARTY CENTENARIAN.

St. Catharines Man Can Look Back Over Eighty Years.

Past the century mark and "still sitting on all six" is the enviable record of Daniel Plumsteel, of St. Catharines, who will be 103 on July 7th next. Mr. Plumsteel is still composes mentis and retains in great measure the full vigor of his younger days.

The early activities of William Lyon Mackenzie. The destruction of his press and type by the Colonial Advocate of which this hot tempered Scotsman was the editor. His election to the Assembly as the member for York and his great popularity in 1834 when Mackenzie was elected the first mayor of York, when it was incorporated under the name of Toronto. The rebellion of 1837, of which Mackenzie was the leader and later his flight to the United States.

All of this and more was vividly recalled by Mr. Plumsteel, who, when interviewed waxed reminiscently of the affairs of eighty and ninety years ago. His lengthy memory commences with the year 1830, and his early childhood days were mentioned and the many hardships and vicissitudes suffered by the settlers in Upper Canada in those early days.

In speaking of later events he remembered very well the visit of King Edward VII., then the Prince of Wales, to Canada. It is related that on the arrival of the prince there was much controversy as whether the future ruler of the Empire should ride in the conveyance provided by the town or on the fire wagon and the civic fathers and the gallant firebrigades almost came to blows before the matter was finally settled. The prince rode on the fire wagon. The issuance of Canada's first postage stamp, the adoption of the decimal system of currency and the early Confederation movement were also recalled.

When interrogated regarding the Fenian Raid of 1866, the grand old man, as he is known, replied that he remembered it very well. "I did not hear of it until Sunday when I and several others from Allanburg armed ourselves and went to the scene of activities," he said. "While there I remember seeing Dr. King, who had been shot in the leg, and we not being in uniform were presumed to be Fenians and were fired upon, but they missed me." Due to the gallant efforts of the local militia their services were not required and they returned to their homes with the other volunteers.

Born at Morrisburg, near Prescott, on July 7th, 1819, Mr. Plumsteel is now 103 years old. Early in life he became connected with the shipbuilding industry and many a good ship has he built. Somewhat of a wanderer by nature he has resided in various parts of Ontario, formerly residing in Allanburg and finally settling in St. Catharines. In politics, Mr. Plumsteel is a staunch Conservative and an adherent of the Methodist Church, never having missed the morning service for many years.

For a man of his years he is surprisingly active. He believes in exercise as a cure for minor ills and weather permitting he still takes his daily constitutional in which he will perhaps walk one or two miles. "I have always been very healthy," he said. This he attributes to his early to bed and early to rise maxim, which is one the rising generation would do well to follow. He arises about 7.30 a.m. and busies himself around the house. Mr Plumsteel is still in full possession of his faculties except he is slightly deaf and his eyes are somewhat weak.

The Plumsteels are a long-lived family for there is a brother living aged 93.

The Panama Hat.

A product of Ecuador worthy of mention is the so-called Panama hat. These are made, not from straw, but from a fibre taken from the leaf of the toquilla plant. From this sub-ly open, carefully prepared and plunged into boiling water, dried and bleached, divided into minute straw or thread, and then deftly woven into hats by the hands of Indian women. This weaving has to be done between midnight and sun-up, while the air is damp. The straw or thread is so delicate that when woven in daylight it is apt to break. It not only takes weeks but often months to make one of these best hats, and one of these hundred dollars hats is worth the money, considering the time and labor spent upon it.

ONTARIO MOTHER HELPS DAUGHTER

Mothers—watch your daughter's health. From the time she reaches the age of twelve until womanhood is established she needs your care and advice. Many women have suffered years of ill-health through lack of such care during this time.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a splendid medicine for girls and women. For nearly fifty years it has been helping mothers and daughters. Let it help you and your daughter.

Hamilton, Ontario.—"When my daughter was thirteen and until she was fifteen she suffered every month so that she could hardly move around the house and when she would have the pains in school she would have to be carried home. Besides the pains and the irregularity she also had headache, dizzy and faint spells, and soreness in her back. I saw your advertisement in the 'Hamilton Spectator' and got Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for her. She does not have it at least a bit of trouble now, and we both recommend your medicine. She works in a candy-shop now and seems well and strong. I give you permission to publish this letter as a testimonial."—Mas. I. P. Cazner, 76 Walnut St., South, Hamilton, Ontario.

To Holders of Five Year 5½ per cent Canada's Victory Bonds

Issued in 1917 and Maturing 1st December, 1922.

CONVERSION PROPOSALS

THE MINISTER OF FINANCE offers to holders of these bonds who desire to continue their investment in Dominion of Canada securities the privilge of exchanging the maturing bonds for new bonds bearing 5½ per cent interest, payable half yearly, of either of the following classes:—

(a) Five year bonds, dated 1st November, 1922, to mature 1st November, 1927.

(b) Ten year bonds, dated 1st November, 1922, to mature 1st November, 1932.

While the maturing bonds will carry interest to 1st December, 1922, the new bonds will commence to earn interest from 1st November, 1922, GIVING A BONUS OF A FULL MONTH'S INTEREST TO THOSE AVAILING THEMSELVES OF THE CONVERSION PRIVILEGE.

This offer is made to holders of the maturing bonds and is not open to other investors. The bonds to be issued under this proposal will be substantially of the same character as those which are maturing, except that the exemption from taxation does not apply to the new issue.

Holders of the maturing bonds who wish to avail themselves of this conversion privilege should take their bonds AS EARLY AS POSSIBLE, BUT NOT LATER THAN SEPTEMBER 30th, to a Branch of any Chartered Bank in Canada and receive in exchange an official receipt for the bonds surreadered, containing an undertaking to deliver the corresponding bonds of the new issue.

Holders of maturing fully registered bonds, interest payable by cheque from Ottawa, will receive their December 1 interest cheque as usual. Holders of coupon bonds will detach and retain the last unmatured coupon before surrendering the bond itself for conversion purposes.

The surrendered bonds will be forwarded by banks to the Minister of Finance at Ottawa, where they will be exchanged for bonds of the new issue, in fully registered, or coupon registered or coupon bearer form carrying interest payable 1st May and 1st November of each year of the duration of the loan, the first interest payment accruing and payable 1st May, 1923. Bonds of the new issue will be sent to the banks for delivery immediately after the receipt of the surrendered bonds.

The bonds of the maturing issue which are not converted under this proposal will be paid off in cash on the 1st December, 1922.

A Concession to Home Investors.

In offering to renew the five and a half per cent. Canadian Government bonds maturing December 1st at the same rate of interest as is carried by the maturing bonds, and allowing a bonus of one month's interest, the inister of Finance is making a material concession to the Canadian investor, as this rate is higher than was paid on the recent Canadian loan in New York. The high class of the security, which is the very best that can be offered in Canada, and the liberal rate of interest should lead to large investment in these Dominion Bonds. Attention is directed to the official advertisement giving details.

House and Barn Burned.

On Friday afternoon Mr. Percy Johnston, South River Road, had the misfortune to lose his house, barn and season's crop by fire. A threshing outfit was at work at the barn, and sparks from the engine probably started the fire. A quantity of furniture was saved from the house, and all the stock and most of the machinery was out of the barn and were saved, but Mr. Johnston's loss will be very heavy.

Dangers of Deforestation.

When by reckless tree cutting the forest cover is removed from hills and mountains, nothing is left to hold the rain—no layer of living roots, mosses or other vegetable growths mixed with decaying leaves, to act as a sponge and retain the moisture. Thereafter, in consequence, the rainfalls run off in torrents, and the streams to which they give rise, instead of supply throughout the year are flooded in winter and dried up in summer. Incidentally, the soil is washed away and the hillsides, once beautiful with fresh growing verdure, become so much barren desert. In this way the water supply of certain areas of country has been practically destroyed. The forests of the hills and mountains are natural storage reservoirs. Destruction of these reservoirs means ruin to the farmers in the valleys and on the prairies.

An Imaginary Traveler's Experiences.

A bright little boy was asked by his new governess as a test of his general knowledge to write a description of travels in Italy. She was rathered staggered, however, to read: "After sailing about Venice on a gorgonzola and being disappointed in the smallness of the boasted 'Bridge of Size,' I went on to Rome. Again I was disappointed. The Coliseum there compared unfavorably with the one in London, and there was no performance on. The maccaroni fields were white for harvest, but the spaghetti was only just in bloom. There was nothing on at the Vaticombe, as the Pope no longer lives underground."

Punished His Brother.

BELGRADE, Sept. 4.—King Alexander has deprived his brother, Prince George, of all communication with the royal house for a period of 20 months for making untrue allegations calculated to damage the interests of the state. During this time he will be required to live at Nish.

Prince George, who is 35 years old, or a year the senior of his brother, renounced his rights as Crown Prince of Serbia in 1909. Late in June of the present year, while George was living in Paris, he was accused by M. Pachitch, the Jugoslav Premier, with writing menacing letters. This, however, was later denied by the Jugoslav Legation at the French capital.

Coal Man Electrocuted.

LONDON, Ont., Sept. 4. — Phillip Warren Brooks, of King street, a partner in the firm of Brooks Bros., coal and wood dealers, Adelaide street, was instantly electrocuted at the yard Friday morning, while oiling a motor used to operate saws and a coal unloading equipment. Brooks was working alone at the machine, when he undertook to oil it. He completed the operation on one side, with the motor still running, and crossed to the other. It is believed that he stood on the metal frame of the coal unloading apparatus, to reach the motor, and that the circuit was completed through the oil can and his body.

Liberal vs. Liberal.

ST. JOHNS, Que., Sept. 4.—A. J. With two rural polls to hear from, the majority was 2,352. Mr. Poulin may lose his deposit.

Both candidates ran as Liberals. Mr. Poulin was the choice of the official convention, held two weeks ago, but feeling in the county was such that Senator Raoul Dandurand refused to recognize him as official candidate and declared that the Liberal Party officially would take no side in the matter.

EXPECT A RECORD CROP

West Is Optimistic Regarding This Year's Showing.

Wheat Yield Surpasses Total of Famous Record of 1915, according to Manitoba Free Press Estimate and Combined Amount of All Sorts of Grain Will Be Over 900,000,000 Bushels.

WINNIPEG, Sept. 4. — Exceeding all previous figures forecasted by various authoritative bodies this year, The Manitoba Free Press, in its nineteenth annual crop estimate for the three Prairie Provinces estimates the wheat yield this year at 371,901,000 bushels from a total acreage of 21,471,000 acres.

During the growing period of the crop there have been comparisons made with the famous crop of 1915, but the paper says, when the total yield of wheat of the Prairie Provinces was 360,187,000 bushels from 13,867,715 acres. It is only necessary to compare these figures to realize that while the present crop of wheat in actual number of bushels is the largest ever produced in the west from point of average of yield, Valley in 1915.

Previous to this date this year have varied from 367,781,000 bushels to 350,000,000 the former being the Dominion Bureau of Statistics estimate, based on conditions at the end of July, and the latter the Grain Trade News estimate.

This year's Free Press estimate would average 17.31 bushels to the acre, while the banner year, 1915, the average was 25.97 bushels.

Other grain yields in the Prairie Provinces this year are estimated as follows, the figures in parenthesis indicating the acreages sown:

Oats, 413,539,000 bushels (10,861,000); barley, 61,080,000 bushels (2,653,400); rye, 54,311,000 bushels (2,329,000); flax, 3,088,000 bushels (504,200).

The newspaper calls attention to the fact that the crop of 1922 has been produced in a shorter period of time than almost any crop in the history of the Prairie Provinces, in many districts not more than 102 days elapsing between seeding of wheat and cutting.

The season of 1922 emphasizes in a marked degree some of the wonderful recuperative powers of the Prairie Provinces, the Free Press says. Over ver large wheat acres in Saskatchewan, after an unduly delayed seeding, no general rain fell for ninety-nine days, and in spite of this, on well-cultivated lands already yields have been threshed that ran from 25 to 30 bushels, though these, of course, are not general in these districts. The paper also calls attention to the recovery of the section of Manitoba which suffered tremendous hail damage in June, and also to the reversal of moisture conditions.

Threshing is general throughout the entire length and breadth of the Prairie Provinces and threshing in northern districts is generally from two to three weeks earlier than it has been for many years, the paper says. Labor up to the present has not been unduly short and farmers are adhering very closely to wage rates agreed on. Never in the history of the west have the railways been in a better position to move the crop in the matter of cars, the Free Press says. Throughout the west on both systems every siding was full of cars before the middle of August, and early movement should be entirely satisfactory.

During crop inspection, the agricultural editor of the Free Press motored considerably over 4,000 miles in addition to many hundred miles of train journey.

Accident at Level Crossing.

OTTAWA, Sept. 4.—Hector Ouellette, aged 14 years, of Hull, was instantly killed, and four others were injured, two of them critically, at the St. Florent street level railway crossing in Hull, when a motor truck in which they were riding was struck by two C. P. R. engines travelling double-headed towards Ottawa.

The engines, which were driven by P. Steward, Carleton Place, and Fireman R. Nolan, Ottawa, struck the front part of the truck, turning it over and grinding the body under its wheels, so that the tender became derailed and tore up part of the right-of-way, all clearing the engine with the exception of young Ouellette.

At the point where the accident occurred the view is somewhat obstructed by a short row of trees, and it is believed that the driver of the motor car did not hear the engine signal for the crossing.

UNCLE SAM'S METHODS

Consuls Made Improper Use of Their Positions.

British Government Took Drastic Action In Connection With Men at Newcastle-on-Tyne, But Washington Is Annoyed That the Irregularities Were Rebuked.

LONDON, Sept. 4.—On order of the United States Government, the American Consulate at Newcastle-on-Tyne closed on Aug. 31. This sensational development followed the revocation of the exequatur of Fred C. Slater, consul, and Russel M. Brooks, vice-consul, by the British Government for alleged abuse of their consular positions to the disadvantage of British interests.

How soon the United States Government means to reopen the Newcastle consulate is a matter of conjecture. The two consular officials who have had exequaturs revoked have been assigned to posts elsewhere. Slater, who is said to have been one of the most efficient consular officials in the service, has been given a post in Spain, while Vice-Consul Brooks has gone to Germany. There is no demotion in their new appointments.

It is almost unprecedented for the United States Government to close a consulate after the cancellation of exequaturs of any of its consular representatives. It leads to the belief that the authorities in Washington have thus administered a rebuke to Great Britain for her action.

From what the correspondent has been able to ascertain, the British Government some weeks ago filed with the State Department alleged proofs that Slater and Brooks had refused vises to persons desiring to go to the United States unless they went on United States ships. It is within the power of any Government to revoke exequaturs without giving reasons, but in this instance charges were lodged.

There is much mystery as to who made the charges against the consular agents to the British Government. But from what can be learned British shipping interests are at the bottom of it. With the United States Government practically in the shipping business, all consular officials are said to have the right to bring to the notice of persons intending to go to America the fact that American vessels are in the passenger service.

Out of this is said to have grown the charges that vises were refused unless the intending travelers of British nationality went by American vessels.

It was said further that one steamship company with which are not only American but other lines, recently took offices in the building in which the American consulate is situated and that this led to criticism by some of the British interests that the consulate was working directly with this agency.

Cancellation of the exequaturs of the American consular officials at Newcastle is the first to arise as a result of alleged boosting of American shipping by American consular officials, and therefore it is of great importance.

The effect of the closing of one of the most important American consulates in the United Kingdom is bound to be far reaching. It will mean that, now, new cises will issue there will have to go to Hull to obtain invoices and it is certain that if the United States Government does not reopen the Newcastle consulate it will result in a loss of thousands of dollars to this big shipping center and will lead to much pressure being brought to bear by the British Government to ask for the re-opening of this consulate.

LENINE IS RECOVERING.

Carried Bullet In His Body for Three Years.

MOSCOW, Sept. 4.—Nicolai Lenine has fully recovered from his recent illness and is planning to address the Communist Congress late in the autumn.

He was the recipient on Thursday of many visits and floods of messages, the occasion being the fourth anniversary of the attempt made on his life by Fanny Kaplan. One of the bullets she sent into his body penetrated the cause of his recent breakdown.

Lenine carried a bullet for more than three years, and it was removed last April. No official bulletin was published.

Ivanoff, the factory worker, who captured Fanny Kaplan, told me of the shooting. "I was outside the Grey-Muchelson factory," he said, "and saw the car of Lenine standing waiting for him. He came out of the factory after addressing a meeting and was stopped by a nurse named Stockton, who asked him why bread meant for hospitals had been requisitioned.

"Five feet away stood the Kaplan girl. She pointed a revolver at Lenine and fired at him three times in quick succession, and ran. I followed and caught her. A crowd threatened her, but she was taken away."

Many Miners Killed.

CUMBERLAND, B.C., Sept. 4.—Fifteen men were killed and 16 injured in the explosion which occurred on Thursday afternoon in number four mine of the Canadian Collieries Dunsmuir coal properties. All of the bodies have been recovered. The dead are: Robert Dunsire, John Johannsen, John Gibson, seven Japanese and five Chinese. Hospital authorities state that all of the injured are likely to recover.

Miss E. Belloti, a nurse, insisted on accompanying Dr. W. Hicks and the rescue party, which went into the fire mine, although warned of the possibility of another explosion. Her heroic work among the injured was praised on all sides.

Trappist Was Stabbed.

NEWCASTLE, N.B., Sept. 4.—John Sullivan was arrested at Rogersville Friday and brought to Newcastle, charged with stabbing Rev. Father Timothy, a member of the Trappist Order, in the cemetery Thursday morning. Father Timothy was stabbed in the face, the knife penetrating to the mouth and cutting the tongue. The wound is a severe one, but is not expected to prove serious.

CATTLE MARKETS

TORONTO LIVE STOCK.

TORONTO, Sept. 4.—The main features of the week's cattle market were the heavy opening run of fresh cattle, receipts on Monday being over four thousand, the dull trade which continued throughout the entire week and the sharp decline in prices. There was almost no demand for export cattle and as a result prices for choice heavy cattle were fully 25c to 50c lower than a week ago. The stocker and feeder demand continued active and prices remained steady with last week with stockers ranging from 2¾c to 3c and feeders at 3¾c to 4c with some short keeps at 4c.

Grass calves swelled the calf receipts, while the veal calf supply remained about normal. Prices were about 50 cents lower than last week with tops at 11c generally and with a few at 11½c. Grass calves sold slowly at 3½c to 4½c.

Lamb prices dropped a half dollar on Monday, but recovered on Tuesday and held steady at 11c to 11¼c for the rest of the week. A strong inquiry for breeding ewes raised the demand. Good light sheep sold at 4c to 4½c, with some at 5c.

Hogs sold a quarter to a half higher on Monday at 13¼c to 13½c, fed and watered. Prospects for hogs are no better and many think they will be cheaper.

Receipts for the week wre: Cattle 5,343, calves 1,321, sheep and lambs 12,129 and hogs 5,338.

Will Dispute Settled.

LONDON, Sept. 4.—The Daily Express, owned by Lord Beaverbrook, announces exclusively:

"Through the intervention of Viscount Rothermere, brother of the late Viscount Northcliffe, the legal dispute over Lord Northcliffe's will has been settled.

"Following Lord Rothermere's mediation, the representatives of two contending wills have met and agreed upon a course of action which will obviate the necessity of further litigation. This agreement now merely awaits confirmation in court."

In the first will, although Lady Northcliffe was left a considerable sum, there were also many other substantial bequests. In the second will she was made sole beneficiary and executrix.

The Daily Express also announces that Sir Campbell Stuart, managing director of the Times, has resigned his other job as managing editor of the Daily Mail. This suggests that those two properties are going to be separated definitely.

WEBSTER —MAN'S MAN

By Peter B. Kyne

Author of "Cappy Ricks," "The Valley of the Giants," Etc.

Copyright by Peter B. Kyne

Don Juan's Hibernian blood thrilled; the cast about for a weapon in this emergency, and his glance rested on the body of the dead officer beside the gate. To possess himself of the latter's heavy "cut-and-thrust" sword was the work of seconds, and with a royal good will Don Juan launched himself into the heart of the scrimmage. He had a hazy impression that he was striking and stabbing, that others were striking and stabbing at him, that men crowded and breathed and pressed and swore and grunted around him, that the fighting-room was no better than it might have been, but was rapidly improving. When the gory fog lifted, and Doctor Pacheco had Don Juan by the hand; they stood together in the arsenal entrance, and the little Doctor was explaining to the war-mad Don Juan that all was over in so far as the arsenal was concerned—the survivors of the garrison having surrendered—that now, having the opportunity, he, Doctor Pacheco, desired to thank Don Juan Cafetero for his life. Don Juan looked at him amazedly, for he hadn't the slightest idea what the Doctor was talking about. He spat, gazed around at the litter of corpses on the arsenal lawn, and nodded his red head approvingly.

In an incredibly short space of time the news that the arsenal had been captured and that Sarros was besieged in the palace spread through the city. The sight of the red banner of revolution floating over the arsenal for the first time in fifteen years brought hundreds of willing recruits to the rebel ranks, as Ricardo Ruey had anticipated; these were quickly supplied with arms and ammunition; by ten o'clock a battalion had been formed and sent off, together with the machine gun company, to connect with the San Bruno contingent advancing from the south to turn the flank of the government troops, while the equipping of an additional battalion proceeded within the arsenal. As fast as the new levies were armed, they were hurried off to reinforce the handful of white men who had, after clearing the arsenal, advanced on the palace and now, with machine guns from the arsenal commanding all avenues of escape from the trap wherein Sarros found himself, were coolly awaiting developments, merely keeping an eye open for snipers.

Thus the forenoon passed away. By one o'clock Don Juan Cafetero—who in the absence of close-range fighting had elected himself ordnance sergeant—passed out the last rifle and ammunition. He was red with slaughter, slippery with gun-grease, dripping with perspiration, and filthy with dust and dirt. "Begorra," he declared, "a cowid bottle av beer would go fine now." Then, recalling his libations, he sighed and put the thought from him. It revived in him, however, for the first time since he had left the steamer, a memory of John Stuart Webster, and his promise to the latter to report on the progress of the war. So Don Juan sought Doctor Pacheco in his headquarters and learned that a signal-man, heliographing from the roof of the arsenal, had been in communication with General Ruey, who reported the situation well in hand, with no doubt of an overwhelming victory before the day should be over. This and sundry other bits of information Don Juan gleaned and then deserted the Subraintean revolutionary army quite as casually as he had joined it, to make his precarious way down the Calle San Rosario to the bay.

CHAPTER XV.

Throughout the forenoon Webster and Dolores, from the deck of the steamer, watched the city. By ten o'clock the sounds of battle had swelled to a deeper, steadier roar, and refugees arriving brought various and fragmentary stories of the fighting. From this hodge-podge of misinformation, however, Webster decided that Ricardo's troops were forcing the issue with vim and determination, and since the most furious fighting was now well in toward the heart of the city, it seemed reasonable to presume the struggle was for possession of the arsenal and palace.

At noon the deep diapason of conflict began to slacken; by one o'clock it had dwindled considerably, and at two o'clock Webster, gazing anxiously cityward, observed Leber's launch coming rapidly out from shore. At the wheel stood Don Juan Cafetero; as the launch shot in under the vessel's side he looked up, searching for Webster's face among the curious throng that lined the rail.

"Who has won?" a voice called, and another, evidently a humorist and a shrewd judge of human nature, replied: "Why ask foolish questions? The rebels, of course. That fellow's Irish and the Irish are born rebels. Look at the scoundrel. He's black with gun grease and burned powder where he isn't red with blood. The butcher!"

"Faugh-a-ballagh!" he shrieked. "We've got the divils cornered now. 'Twill be over two hours hince."

Don Juan tied up the launch at the gangway and leaped up the ladder, three steps at a time. "Glory be to God," he panted and hurled himself into Webster's arms. "I was in it! I was. I got back in time to catch up wit' the lads at the warehouse an' they were the fine, fightin' devils. I'll grumble you. Och, 'twas a grand bit av a fight—whilst it lasted. They put me in the motor-thruck, loadin' the belts wit' cartridges as fast as the gunners emptied them, but faith they couldn't keep me empty. I got into the heart av the scrimmage in the yard av the arsenal an' faith 'twas well for that little Dicthor Pacheco I did. 'Twas wurrk to me likin'. I'd a matchete—"

"You bloodthirsty scoundrel!" Webster shook the war-mad son of Erin. "I told you not to mix in it, but to hang around on the fringe of the fight, and bring us early news. Suppose you'd been killed? For a couple of hours; what fightin' there was on the outside was street shootin'—an' not to me likin'."

"Is it quite safe to bring Miss Ruey ashore, Juan?"

"'Tis safe enough at the Hotel Matteo. We have the city for half a mile beyant, in the rear av them—an' they're not fightin' to get to the bay. The guards an' some av the Fifteenth Infantry regiment are in the palace an' the quarrel close by, an' thim that we felled to get in the arsenal have fired thim. But the bulk av the Sarros army is thryin' to break through to the south an' west, to the hills. D'ye mind the spur thruck that runs in a semi-circle around the city? Well, thin, the rebels are behint the embankmint, takin' it aisy. Have no worry, sor. Whin we've took the palace we'll move on an' dhrive the varmints from behint up to that railroad embankmint, where General Ruey can bid them the time av day."

Webster turned to Dolores. "Do you wish to go ashore?"

She nodded, her flashing eyes bent in admiration upon the gay, grimy Don Juan Cafetero, for she was half Irish, and in that one touch to make she knew the ecstasy for one of her blood. "I think my brother will sleep in his father's old room to-night," she murmured softly. "And I would sleep in mine."

They followed Don Juan down the gangway to the launch and sped back to the city. The door of Leber's warehouse stood wide open; within was a litter of greasy rags and broken packing cases, with Leber, quite supplied, sitting on a keg of nails and staring curiously at it all.

Guided by Don Juan Cafetero, Webster and Dolores passed on up the Calle San Rosario. Occasionally a bullet, fired two or three miles to the west, droned lazily overhead or dropped with a sharp metallic sound on the corrugated-iron roofs of a building. At the hotel the proprietor alone was in evidence, seated behind the desk smoking in profound indifference.

In response to Webster's eager inquiries for the latest news from the front, the placid fellow shrugged and murmured: "Quien sabe?" Evidently for him such stirring scenes had long since lost their novelty; the bloom was off the pench, as it were.

Webster went upstairs and helped himself to another automatic and several spare clips of shells which he had left in his trunk. On his return to the lobby, Dolores saw what a very nearsighted person, indeed, would have seen—to wit: that he was not pleased to remain in the hotel and with the spirit of adventure strong within him was desirous of progressing still farther toward the firing, in the hope of eliciting some favorable news as to the progress of the fight. She realized, however, that he would do his duty and remain with her in the hotel; so she said gayly:

"Suppose we walk out a little farther, Caliph. Many of the side streets will be as safe and peaceful as one could desire, and if warfare should develop in our vicinity we can step into some house."

"I do not like to have you run the slightest risk—" he began, but she pooh-poohed him into silence, took him by the arm with a great air of camaraderie, and declared they should go forth to adventure—but cautiously.

Webster glanced at Don Juan. "We can go a half or three quarters of a mile out the Calle San Rosario, sor," the Irishman answered. "After that 'twill not be a pleasant sight for the young leddy—an' there may be some shootin'. Squads av the governmint troops took refuge in the houses an' took to snipin'. 'Twill be shlow wurrk roundin' the last av thim up. Even afther the fight is over, there'll be scatterin' shootin' scrapes all av the night long. I'm thinkin'."

"At the slightest danger we'll turn back," Webster announced, and with Don Juan Cafetero scouting the way a block in advance they progressed slowly toward the center of the disturbance.

Soon they passed a horse dead in the middle of the street; a little farther on one of the machine-gun company, a lank Texan, sat on the curb rolling a cigarette with his left hand. He had a bullet through his right shoulder and another through the calf of his leg and had received no first aid attention; the flies were bothering him considerably and he was cursing softly and fluently, like the ex-mule-skinner he was.

Farther on another white invader lay face down in the gutter; for him the fight had ended almost ere it had begun. In the next block half a dozen sandal-footed Sobranteans, in the blue and red-trimmed uniform of the Guardia Civil, lay sprawled in uncouth attitudes, where the first blast of a machine gun had caught them as they rushed out of the police station to repel the advancing mercenaries.

Seeing that the main street of the city would assume even a more grisly aspect the longer they followed it, Don Juan led Webster and Dolores a couple of blocks down a cross street and turned out into the Calle de Hernandez, parallel to the Calle San Rosario. There had been no shooting in this street, apparently; as they proceeded not even a stray bullet whined down the silent calle.

Four blocks from the government palace they found the narrow sidewalks of this quiet street lined with wounded from both sides, with a doctor and half a dozen of Ricardo's hired fighters ministering to them; as they threaded their way between the recumbent figures they came upon Mother Jenks, brandy bottle and glass in hand, "doling her bit."

"Hah! So here you are, my lamb," she greeted Dolores. "Right-o. Just where yer ought to be, Gor' bless yer sweet face. Let these poor misfortunates alone now that the state of the new president ain't too proud to care for 'em. 'Ere, lass. 'Old up the 'ead o' this young cockerel with the 'ole in 'is neck. 'Ere, lad. Take a bowse now! 'Ere's some o' yer own people, not a lot o' bloomin' yeller bellies, come to put something else in yer neck—somethink that'll stimulate yer."

The "young cockerel," a blond youth of scarce 20 summers, twisted his head and grinned up at Dolores as she knelt beside him to lift him up. "Here, here, sister," he mumbled, "you'll get that white dress dirty. Never mind me. It's just a flesh wound, only my neck has got stiff and I'm weak from loss of blood."

Mother Jenks winked at Webster as she set a gloss of brandy to the stricken adventurer's lips. "Give me a bit o' the white meat, as my sainted 'Enery used to sy," she murmured contentedly.

Dolores looked up at Webster. "I'll stay here," she said simply. "I've found a job helping Mother Jenks. You and Don Juan may run along if you wish. I know you're as curious as children."

They were. It would have been impossible for any man with red corpuscles in his blood to harken to the shooting and shouts only three city blocks distant without yearning to see the fight itself.

"I'll return in 15 minutes, at the latest," he promised her, and with Don Juan Cafetero, who had helped himself to a rifle and bayonet from one of the wounded, he turned the corner into the next street which they followed west through a block plentifully sprinkled with the dead of both factions.

Don Juan led the way through an alley in the rear of the Catedral de la Santa Cruz to the door of the sacristy; as he placed his hand on the latch three rifle bullets struck around them, showering them with fragments of falling adobe.

"There's a house party in the neighborhood," yelled Don Juan, and darted into the church, with Webster at his heels, just in time to escape another fusillade. They walked through the sacristy and passed through a door into the great cathedral, with its high, carved, gothic-arched ceiling. Through the thick-closed doors of the main entrance, lost in the dimness of space out in front, the sounds of the battle half a block away seemed very distant, indeed.

They passed the altar and Don Juan genuflected and crossed himself reverently. "I'll be afther makin' me confession," he whispered to Webster. "Wait for me, sor."

He leaned his rifle against the altar railing, crossed the church and touched lightly on the shoulder a monk kneeling in prayer before the altar of the Virgin; the latter bent his head while Don Juan whispered; then he rose and both went into the confessional, while Webster found a bench along the wall and waited.

Presently Don Juan came forth, knelt on the red-tiled floor and prayed —something, Webster suspected, he had not done for quite a while. And when he had finished his supplication and seemed inclined to linger with him, the monk touched the door and from the quiet of the house of God they passed out into the street and the tumult of hell.

"I've been clost to death this day," Don Juan explained, "an' the day is not done. Be this token, 'tis long since I'd made me last confession; sure, until you picked me out av the mire, sor, 'tis little thought I had for the hereafter."

From their place they could see a dozen or more of Ricardo's hired fighters crouched under the shelter of the palace walls across the street. "I think we'll be safer there," Webster cried, as a couple of bullets struck the stone steps at their feet and ricocheted against the cathedral door. "That rifle of yours is making you a marked man, Don Juan."

They ran across the street and joined the men under the palace wall.

"What's this?" Don Juan demanded briskly. "Have ye not smuoked thim out yet?"

"Noddings doing," a young German answered. "Der chief has sent word dot we shall not artillery use on der palace. Men all around it we haf, mit a machine gun commanding each gate; most of der boys have chust moved out west in der rear of der government troops."

"Then," Don Juan declared with conviction, "there'll be fighting here to speak av, until late."

"Der is plenty of choy hunting snipers, mein freund. Der houses here shouts vos filled mit dem."

"I'll have no cut lights in mine," Don Juan proclaimed. "Come wit' me, so, an' we'll be in at the death out beyant at the railroad embankment."

"Too late," Webster answered, for on the instant to the west the crackle of rifle and machine gun fire intensified with the staccato barks of a Maxim Vickers broke out, swelling almost immediately to a steady outpouring of sound. "We'll stay here where we're safe for the finals. When General Ruey has cleaned up out there he'll come here to take command."

For half an hour the sounds of a brisk engagement to the west did not slacken; then with disconcerting suddenness the uproar died away fully 50% per cent.

"They're going in with the bayonet and machetes," somebody who knew remarked laconically. "Wait and you'll hear the cheering."

They waited fully ten minutes, but presently, as the firing gradually died away, they heard it, faint and indistinguishable at first, but gradually coming nearer. And presently the trapped men in the palace heard it, too. "Viva Ruey! Viva! Viva Ruey!"

"All over but the shouting." Don Juan remarked disgustedly. "The lads in the palace will surrindher now. Sure General Ruey was right afther all. For why should he shoot holes in the house he's goin' to live in, an' where, be the same token, he gives a dinner party this night?"

"I'm glad the end is in sight," Webster replied. "We have no interest in this revolution, John, and it isn't up to us to burn in on the play; yet if it went against the Ruey faction, I fear we'd be forced into active service in spite of ourselves. There is such a thing as fighting to save one's skin, you know."

Don Juan laughed pleasurably. "What a shame we missed the row out beyant at the railroad embankmint," he declared.

"I wish you'd kept out of it, Don Juan. What business had you in the fight at the cuartel? Suppose you'd been killed?"

"Smell loss!" Don Juan retorted. "I should have mourned you nevertheless, John."

"Would you that same?" Don Juan's buttermilk eyes lighted with affection and pleasure. "Would it put a pang in the heart of you, sor, to see me stretched?"

"Yes, it would, John. You're a wild, impulsive, lunatic, worthless Irishman, but there's a broad vein of pay ore in you, and I want you to live until I can develop it. Mr. Leary returned to operate the mine, he'll need a foreman he can trust."

"And do you trust me, sor?"

"I do indeed, John. By the way, you never gave me your word of honor to cut out red liquor for keeps. Up till today I've had to watch you—and I don't want to do that. It isn't dignified for either of us, and from today on you must be a man or a mouse. If you prove yourself a man, I want you in my business; if you prove yourself a mouse, somebody else may have you. How about you, John? The cantinas will be open to-night, and fire water will be free to the soldiers of the new republic. Must I watch you tonight?"

Don Juan shook his reckless red head. "I'll never let a drop of liquor cross my lips without your permission, sor," he promised simply. "I am the man and you are the master."

"We'll shake hands on that!" After the western habit of validating all verbal agreements with a hand shake, Webster thrust his hard hand out to his man, who took it in both of his and held it for half a minute. He wanted to speak, but couldn't; he could only bow his head as his eyes clouded with the tears of his appreciation. "Ah, sor," he blurted presently, "I'd die for ye an' welcome the chanst."

A wild yell of alarm broke out in the next block, at the north gate of the palace; there was a sudden flurry of rifle fire and cries of "Viva Ruey! Viva! Stop them! Stop them! They're breaking out!"

Without awaiting orders the hired fighters along the wall—some 15 or thereabouts—broke into the street during a skirmish line, just as a troop of cavalry, with drawn sabers, swept around the corner and charged upon the devoted little line. "Sarros must be therein!" was the cry of Don Juan Cafetero remarked coolly, and emptied a saddle. "They threw open the big palace gate, 'an the guards are clearin' a way for him to the bay." He emptied another saddle.

In the meantime Ricardo's fire eaters had not been idle. The instant the guards turned into the street a deadly magazine fire had been opened on them. The cavalry charge suffered heavily through the open gate, but once the besiegers in front of it, but once they turned the corner into the next street they had the fire of but a handful of men to contend with. Nevertheless it was sufficiently deadly. Many of the horses in the front rank went down with their riders, forcing the maddened animals behind to clear their carcasses by leaping over them, which some did. Many, however, tripped and stumbled in their wild gallop, spilling their riders.

"Stay by the wall, you madman," Webster ordered. "There'll be enough left to riddle those men in the street and saber them!"

And there were! They died to a man, and the sadly depleted troop of guards galloped on, leaving Don Juan and Webster unscathed on the sidewalk, with only living men unhurt in that shambles.

Not for long, however, did they have the street to themselves. Around the corner of the palace wall a limousine, with the curtains down and with six wheels, skidded, struck the carcass of a horse and turned over, catapulting the chauffeur into the middle of the street.

"Sarros!" shrieked Don Juan and ran to the overturned vehicle. It was quite empty.

"Bully boy, Senor Sarros," Webster laughed. "He's turned a pretty trick, hasn't he? Sent his guards out to back a pathway for his empty limousine! That means he's hoping to draw the watchers from the other gate!"

But Don Juan Cafetero was not listening; he was running at top speed down the street toward the palace grounds—and Webster followed.

As they swung into the street upon which this south gate opened, Webster saw that it was deserted of all save the dead, for the machine gun had worked well and had had the effect of arousing the curiosity of his enemies as to the cause of the uproar at the north gate, in consequence of which they had all scurried around the block to see what they could see, thus according Sarros the thing he desired most—a fighting chance and a half minute to get through the gate and headed for the steamship landing without interference.

Webster and Don Juan came abreast the high, barred gate in the thick, 20-foot masonry wall as the barrier swung back and a man, in civilian clothes, but bandaged through on a magnificent bay thoroughbred.

"That's him. Shtop the divil!" screamed Don Juan. "They'll do the decent thing be me if I take him alive."

To Webster, who had acquired the art of snap shooting while killing time in many a lonely camp, the bay charger offered an easy mark. "Hate to down that beautiful animal," he remarked—and pulled away.

The horse leaped into the air and came down stiff-legged; Sarros spurred it cruelly, and the gallant beast strove to gather itself into its stride, staggered and sank to its knees, as with a wild Irish yell Don Juan Cafetero reached the dictator's side.

Sarros drew a revolver, but before he could use it Don Juan tapped him smartly over the head with his rifle barrel, and the man toppled inertly to the ground beside his dying horse.

"More power to ye sor." Don Juan yelled cheerily and turned to receive Webster's approval.

What he saw paralyzed him for an instant. Webster was standing beside the gate, firing into a dozen of Sarros' soldiery who were pouring out of a house just across the street, where for the rebels should enter the city in force and the house-to-house search for snipers should begin. They had been about to emerge and beat a hasty retreat, when Sarros rode out at the gate, and with a rush they followed, gaining the sidewalk in time to be witnesses to the dictator's downfall.

For a moment they had paused, huddled on the sidewalk behind their officer, who, turning to scout the street up and down, beheld John Stuart Webster standing by the gate with an automatic in his hand. At the same instant Webster's attention had been attracted to the little band on the sidewalk; the man who had inconsiderately less a personage than his late acquaintance, the fire eating Capt. Jose Benavides. Coincidentally Benavides recognized Webster.

It was an awkward situation. Webster realized the issue was about to be decided, that if he would have it in his favor, he should waste not one split-second before killing the mercenary. Benavides at the latter stood staring at him. It was not a question, now, of who should beat the other to the draw, for each had already filled his hand. It was a question, rather, as to who should recover first from his astonishment. If Benavides decided to let bygones be bygones and retreat without firing a shot, then Webster was quite willing to permit him to pass unmolested; indeed, such was his aversion to shooting any man, so earnestly did he hope the Sobrantean would consider that discretion was the better part of valor, that he resolved to inculcate that idea in the Hotspur.

"Captain Benavides," he said suavely, "your cause is lost. If you care to escape aboard the steamer, I will see to it that you are not removed from her before she sails; if you care to surrender to me now, I give you my word of honor you will not be executed."

Benavides might have had, and doubtless did have, his faults, but cowardice was not one of them. And he did have the ghost of a sense of humor. An evil smile flitted over his olive features.

"Without taking into consideration the bayonets at my back," he replied, "it strikes me the odds are even now, and yet you patronize me."

Webster was nettled. "I'd rather do that than kill you, Benavides," he retorted. "Don't be a fool. Run along and sell your papers, and take your pitiful little sandal-footed brigands with you. Scat!"

Benavides' hand, holding his pistol, had been hanging loosely at his side. With his furious glance meeting Webster's unfalteringly, with the merest movement of his wrist and scarcely without movement of his forearm, he threw up his weapon and fired. Scarcely a fifth of a second had elapsed between the movement of his wrist and the pressure of his finger on the trigger; Webster, gazing steadily into the somber eyes, had noted no hint of the man's intention, and was caught naturally off his guard.

The bullet tore through his biceps, momentarily paralyzing him, and his automatic dropped clattering to the sidewalk; as he stooped and recovered it, Benavides fired again, creasing the top of his left shoulder. The Sobrantean took aim for a third and finishing shot, but when he pulled the trigger the hammer fell on a defective cartridge, which gave to John Stuart Webster all the advantage he craved. He planted a bullet in Benavides' abdomen with his first shot, blew out the dictator's brains with his second, and whirled to meet the charge of the little sandal-footed soldados, who, seeing their leader fallen, had without an instant's hesitation and apparently by mutual consent decided to avenge him.

CASTORIA

Fletcher's Castoria is strictly a remedy for Infants and Children. Foods are specially prepared for babies. A baby's medicine is even more essential for Baby. Remedies primarily prepared for grown-ups are not interchangeable. It was the need of a remedy for the common ailments of Infants and Children that brought Castoria before the public after years of research, and no claim has been made for it that its use for over 30 years has not proven.

What is CASTORIA?

Castoria is a harmless substitute for Castor Oil, Paregoric, Drops and Soothing Syrups. It is pleasant. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other narcotic substance. Its age is its guarantee. For more than thirty years it has been in constant use for the relief of Constipation, Flatulency, Wind Colic and Diarrhoea; allaying Feverishness arising therefrom, and by regulating the Stomach and Bowels, aids the assimilation of Food; giving healthy and natural sleep. ## LATE AND CUNNING STYLES

Plaited Plaid Skirt and Bloomers; Blue and White Swiss Dress; Chambray Frock.

A practical little outfit, combining Scotch plaid gingham and plain color chambray or white voile or handkerchief linen, shows a plaited skirt of the plaid fabric with plaid bloomers, and a plaid color or white blouse banded in the plaid.

A smart little blue and white dotted Swiss dress has wide-flared cuffs, a cape collar and sash belt of white organdie, the frock having bloomers of the Swiss. A pale blue chambray frock cut on straight smock lines is trimmed with embroidery in peasant colorings and has self-fabric bloomers.

For a very little girl a dress of yellow chambray, made with full skirt and baby waist, is trimmed with bands of checked gingham around collar, cuffs and scalloped skirt, the self-fabric bloomers having checked bands or cuffs.

BIG COLLARS ON NEW CAPES

Wide, Fat Roll of Satin Stuffed Becoming to Long, Slender Necks; Smart Handbags.

Some of the new capes have a veritable bolster for a collar. A wide, fat, roll of satin stuffed so that it will remain round and plump is actually becoming to long and slender necks. Other capes have upstanding rosses of soft silk as collars. These flowers are so big and so closely set on the neckband that they form a ruche. Most of the new capes, as well as the new coats, have the high, standup collar.

It is smart to have a handbag in some shade contrasting with your costume. A dark suit, for example, cries aloud for a scarlet taffeta handbag. A tan suit needs a bag of periwinkle blue. A jade frock or cloak is well set off by a bag of white. Often, the bag and hat match in shade. Sometimes bag, hat and stockings match, and this is the ultimate of smartness.

Engines and Cars await Grain Rush

Preparations upon a monumental scale for the marketward movement of Western Canada's 1922 grain crop have been made by the Canadian National Railways. Hundreds of giant locomotives and tens of thousands of freight cars have been put through the Railway's shops at Winnipeg and made fit and ready for the greatest traction effort of the year—and of many years.

This mobilization of equipment has been in progress since the beginning of the year, with the result that Canadian National Railways are now fully prepared, waiting, and even eager to get to the business of hauling grain. If all the engines ready for service were placed end to end, they would stretch out for a distance of more than two miles; while if all the cars prepared since the first of the year for the movement of grain were placed end to end, they would stretch out approximately 350 miles.

The history of the preparation starts with the desire on the part of the Management to ease the unemployment situation last Winter, and at the same time accomplish some useful purpose. The Management conceived the idea of putting into the maximum of efficiency all of the bad-order equipment on western lines. Full staffs of men were set to work in the two great shops and yards, and all-ing locomotives and freight cars headed in for treatment.

The locomotives ready to move the crop have an average length of 65 feet. Some conception of the enormous power represented in these iron steeds may be gleaned from the statement of fact that assuming them to be equal to the Mikado, capable of drawing 4,540 tons; the hauling capacity of these locomotives would be 121,520,320 bushels of wheat if all the engines were hauling capacity trains at the same time. In other words, the motive-power prepared by the Canadian National for moving the crop, is equal to the task of hauling about one-third of the total crop of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba at once.

CITY TERMINALS NEEDED.

Would Improve Value of Rural Motor Routes.

A noticeable feature of the operation of rural motor routes into and out of various cities is the lack of central receiving or distributing stations. In each city the operators maintained their own individual stations and each carried on his own business independent of the business of others.

Where a number of independent routes have their terminals in a given city, the overland expenses incident to the maintenance of individual terminal stations are multiplied many times, while the advantages of a central terminal are lost altogether.

These advantages are very real. In the first place, a central terminal for a group of rural routes is in itself an advertisement of the services, in that the attention of the shipping public is drawn to the possibilities of motor transportation. The use of a central terminal encourages and facilitates the transfer of goods originating on one route and destined to some point on another route. The problem of city delivery, which is serious in large cities, can be solved by means of a common delivery service, supported by all operators who use the central terminal. This eliminates operating heavy trucks to scattered points in congested districts to deliver relatively small consignments. Last, but not least, a central terminal effects some very material economies, in such items as office rental, clerical assistance, telephone charges, heat, light, and related expenses ordinarily incurred with the maintenance of terminal facilities.

In view of these facts, the United States Department of Agriculture recommends the central city terminal to the consideration of groups of motor truck operators who maintain individual terminals. Possibly a central terminal company can best be organized as a joint stock corporation. Expenses may be prorated on the basis of the volume of business transacted through the terminal by each sharer in the enterprise. It is realized that competitive influence might offer obstacles to this plan, but the operation of such a terminal could be made independent of ordinary competitive factors.

Culling Poultry Hints.

It is pretty generally established that pullets which begin to lay early in life, provided they are fully matured, are almost sure to be the most profitable members of the flock. Ordinarily this means that the pullets which commence to patronize the trough in the autumn are the snow-birds, are the most likely candidates for heavy-laying records. Fowls that fail to start production before Christmas seldom attain high scores. It usually follows, also, that pullets continuing to lay late into the fall, thereby postponing the moult until cold weather is at hand, are almost without exception heavy producers.

Remember then, says Farm and Home, in culling the flock for the best layers, that hens which have a nice new coat of feather by July look trim and neat, but they are not often profitable. The late moulters, those that look ragged and dirty when the others are sleek and clean, are almost always the best layers in the flock. Moreover, it will be noted that the late moulters get through with this task very quickly, whereas the early moulters usually drag along for three or four months in changing their coat of feathers.

Seek British Trade.

Canadian farmers have never yet systematically gone after the British market, says Farm and Home. We have struggled along under the impression that the natural market for our farm products is the huge population of United States, and so it is, but political or national division offers all farm factors. This is the chief fact we have to face and is insurmountable. It, therefore, becomes necessary to market our products in Great Britain despite competition in that field from all other sources—a task which will test our fitness to the last degree. We must organize in every line of production as we have never organized before; more, we must study the British market in every detail, and lastly we must have trade representatives in every British city and town. Only then can we serve ourselves as circumstances dictate. It remains to be seen whether our agricultural leaders are capable of rising to the occasion. It is all a matter of co-operation—and leadership.

Dutch Cheese.

Canada, which has produced better macaroni than Italy, may soon make better Dutch cheese than Holland. J. A. Ruddick, the Dominion Dairy Commissioner, has returned from Holland with ideas and specifications for a new cheese, which he believes Canadian dairies can produce with profit. He is reticent regarding its nature, but says that he had it in mind for a long time before visiting Holland to learn how to make it.

Maturity of Alfalfa Crop.

Alfalfa cannot ordinarily be allowed to stand in the field until the proper stage of maturity is reached, and except in a season of drought when the dry-matter content of the plant is abnormally high, it should be allowed to lie in the field four to six hours so that some of the surplus water can evaporate.

At present prices the droppings of a hen for one year are worth about $2.

Following the team in the field gives too much exercise to the tool. Keep the colt in a box stall, and do not let it nurse until the dam cools off.

Forest tent caterpillars are causing considerable damage in Prince Edward Island. The insects are in such numbers that they have caused several hold-ups.

Keep Records of Planting.

Gardeners should keep records of planting dates and maturity of certain varieties of vegetables so that they may plant the earliest, the latest and the mid-season varieties when planting time comes. This information will save trouble and enable one to plant so the table may be supplied during the growing season.

Utilizing Unmarketable Potatoes.

Unmarketable potatoes add succulence to the dairy ration. Where corn silage is not available and there are plenty of small potatoes, a peck a day will give an increase in milk flow. They should be introduced into the ration gradually and be run through a root cutter to avoid the possibility of choking the animal.

ABOUT THE SILO FILLING

Both Cutting Outfit and Moisture Content Important.

Have Sufficient Horse-power for Cutting—How to Control the Moisture Content—Mustard—Advantages of Dairying.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto)

When silo filling is to be done quickly, that is, one hundred or more tons of fodder cut per day, the cutter and the power must be in keeping with the work at hand. An eighteen horse-power engine or motor and a fourteen-inch blower cutter will handle one hundred tons per day. Where smaller silos are used and the farmer desires to, or has to, do the work largely with the farm help, small cutters can be used. Eight-inch cutters will handle three tons per hour if driven by an engine of not less than eight horse-power.

Have Sufficient Horse-power for Cutting.

Claims are often made that two or three horse-power outfits can do effective work, but this is a mistake. If the work is to be done quickly and effectively with the best use of labor the power should be ample. If it is desired to cut forty tons per day the power should be not less than eight horse. Sixty tons per day the power should be twelve horse. One hundred tons per day will require an eighteen horse-power engine. The cutter should be of the proper size for the power used. Carrier cutters do not require as much power as do the blower cutters, but the advantage of easier erection, simplicity and ease of wetting the fodder through the use of the blower offsets the increased power requirement. Cylinder and knife on fly-wheel types of machines are equally satisfactory providing of course that they are equally well built. Low priced, poorly constructed fodder cutters are dangerous. Select a cutter with a good reputation, and one that is as well built as a good steam engine is built.

Moisture Content Important.

It is essential that there should be sufficient moisture present in the fodder at the time it is being put into the silo to provide the water requirement for the ensiling process and leave the surplus necessary to have amply moist well made silage, after the fermentative and cooling processes have taken place. With sufficient moisture present in the ensiled mass there is little danger of the fermentation temperatures running too high, the greater the amount of water present the firmer the cut fodder will pack and the smaller the spaces for air. Corn in the early glazed or denting stage, oats, peas or vitch green enough for high grade hay making carry sufficient water in the natural juices to meet the requirement for ensilage. Frequently it is necessary to use corn, oats, peas or sunflowers that have suffered from drouth, or have been permitted to remain unharvested until too far past the best condition for silage making. If so, the shortage of plant moisture can be made up by the application of water in quantity sufficient to thoroughly wet the fodder.

How to Apply the Extra Moisture.

Water is best applied by running a stream directly into the fodder cutter while the fodder is being passed through and blown up into the silo. With water under pressure a valve to control the flow and a section of garden hose the process of wetting the cut fodder is easily accomplished. Corn fodder that has remained in the field until December and become quite dry can be successfully ensiled if sufficient attention is paid to the wetting and packing thoroughly in the silo. The wetting must be complete and all the air possible pressed out by trampling the evenly spread cut fodder as it goes into the silo. With red clover, alfalfa, peas, oats, vetch, rye, sweet clover, mustard, grasses, sunflower, corn or artichoke stalks, there is little likelihood of overdoing the wetting if a stave silo is used, since such a structure permits any surplus moisture to drain away. With a water tight cement concrete or tile silos a little judgment is required in determining the amount of water necessary to give complete saturation but not flooding. For further information regarding silo building and ensilage apply to the Department for a copy of Bulletin 287.—L. Stevenson; Sec. Dept. of Agriculture, Toronto.

Mustard.

Fields that are heavily infested with mustard can frequently be turned to good account by using such areas for the production of silage fodders. The sowing of flax and oats in the proportion of one bushel of oats to one bushel of peas per acre (the mustard will come volunteer), will make a very acceptable silage. Mustard has a high feeding value, and the seed in the soil can be exhausted in time by following the practice of using mustard infested lands for silage crops, cutting the entire mass, cereal, legume and weeds and growing all in the silo in a finely cut and packed condition.

Advantages of Dairying.

Dairying maintains the fertility of the soil.

Dairying means a steady income.

Dairying furnishes regular employment for labor.

The market for dairy products is steady.

Dairy utilizes unsaleable roughage.

Dairy affords opportunity for increased income.

Dairying utilizes waste land.

The aim of the dairy farmer should be to keep more and better cows, thus reducing the cost of producing milk.

U. S. Senator Gore on the Farmer.

The farmer cannot continue to sell his produce for less than the cost of production any more than he could live in a vacuum. Out of the reduced proceeds of what he sells, the farmer is obliged to pay extraordinary prices for everything that he buys. I believe that our national progress and prosperity are bound up with the progress and prosperity of our farmers. Any policy which oppresses the farmer will bear evil fruit, and will dry up the fountains of national prosperity.

Montreal Board of Trade Perpetuates Maisonneuve

There is a striking monument in Montreal to Maisonneuve, founder of Canada's Metropolis. As in his life time, his thoughts were of the West, so does the memorial to him stand to-day. The sculptor caught the spirit of the adventurous pioneer in the poise of the body and the head. Vision, courage, determination are plain to the observant eye and understanding mind.

Maisonneuve and the host of gallant men and noble women who laid the foundation of the Canada of to-day, long ago embarked upon the greatest and last quest. But their faith in the new land is as a living flame in the hearts of their successors. They see their country favored by geography and nature, a link between East and West, and extending almost 4,000 miles from ocean to ocean. They know that it is endowed with a richness of natural resources beyond the power of man to calculate. Above all they rejoice in its attainment to a place and a voice in the councils of the nations.

Retrospect is often pleasant. The true Canadian has little time for that. His heart and mind are on the present and the future. He knows that if his country is to come to full fruition as a nation it must be by still worthier efforts on the part of its people individually and collectively. No single province within the Dominion's far-flung boundaries can afford to disregard another. Each must be in sympathy with all the rest. The East must share in the problems as well as in the joys and prosperity of the West. The West must have faith in the East. Bound by an invisible but unbreakable chain of mutual affection and goodwill they can and will put and keep Canada in the very vanguard of the world's great nations.

The development of the national spirit has been fostered in many an hour of peril, difficulty, and struggle. It is beginning to bloom in beauty and strength. Its progress has been greatly advanced of late years by the action of important organizations in sending delegations to many sections of the country, so that their members may add to their first-hand knowledge of their home land. Such an organization is the Montreal Board of Trade which will celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of its founding by beginning on September 1, a thirty days' tour of the Dominion. The members will not only see the country in all the glory of its most beautiful scenic settings, but the journey will be so arranged as to give them a new perspective of its wealth of soil, forests, mines and waters, and impressions of its industrial and commercial growth that would be impossible of visualizing in any other way.

From Montreal the party will travel westward via Toronto and the Great Lakes; thence from Port Arthur to Winnipeg, the greatest primary grain centre on the continent, across the vast prairie lands and through the Rockies to Vancouver and Victoria.

On the return journey they will make the 550-mile cruise up the north Pacific Coast from Vancouver to Prince Rupert, on one of the palatial Canadian National Railways steamers. This part of the journey will give the party a splendid idea of the development in the mining, lumbering and pulp and paper industries of British Columbia, with all their future possibilities. At Prince Rupert, Canada's most northerly Pacific port, hewn out of the solid rock of Kaien Island, there will be every opportunity to gain an insight into the enormity of the halibut and salmon industry of the province. From Prince Rupert eastward the party will become acquainted with the Skeena River, with its historic and romantic traditions, its arresting grandeur, and its fame as one of the most prolific salmon streams in the world. They will see too, some of the Bulkley and Nechako River Valley country, one of the newest fields of settlement opened up in the west. Unknown to the vast majority of Canadians, the luxurious valleys that lay between the mountain ranges in this area, are suitable for mixed farming, dairying, fruit growing and cattle raising. In the years to come their productivity, now a matter of knowledge to comparatively few, will offer means of livelihood and competence to thousands of new people.

Shortly after leaving Prince George, the party will pass through Mount Robson Park. This is a veritable wonderland of mountain scenery, some 650 square miles in extent and set aside by the government of British Columbia as a national playground and wild life sanctuary. Here will be obtained an excellent view of Mount Robson, with an altitude of 13,068 feet. It towers above the surrounding peaks, sublime, majestic, with green glistening glaciers and pure white snow adding to its beauty. Sometimes its own summit is lost amid the mists and clouds; quite often that summit is the centre of raging storms. But on Mount Robson they beat in vain.

Next Jasper Park, another mountain kingdom, but of greater extent; embracing 4,400 square miles of sublime mountain scenery, is entered. Here the party will spend a day at Jasper Lodge, the new Alpine chalet built on the shore of Lac Beauvert by Canadian National Railways, and the first of a series to be built throughout these Northern Canadian Rockies. At night they will leave for Edmonton.

From Edmonton the homeward route will be through the rich farm lands of the northern part of the prairie provinces to Winnipeg following the trans-continental line of Canadian National Railways through the rich pulp forests and new farm lands of Northern Ontario to Cochrane, down through the famous Cobalt mining districts over the Temiskaming & Northern Ontario Railway to North Bay, thence to Ottawa, and back to Montreal.

THE CORN EAR-WORM

Most Destructive Enemy of the Corn Crop.

The Mother Moth Lays Eggs During June, July and August—Egg to Moth Cycle About Forty Days—Deep Fall Ploughing Advocated—Horse's Efficiency Depends on Rations.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

The moths responsible for the egg laying that produces so many destructive worms appear in June and deposit their eggs on various food plants during June, July and August. The female moths that are attracted to corn lay their eggs on the silks. The eggs are small yellow circular flattened discs, that hatch three or four days after being deposited. The young worms feed on the silk for a day or two and then work down into the interior of the husk tips, where they continue to feed on the silks and tender kernels at the tip of the ear, gradually working downward as they grow to maturity. When fully developed the Ear-worms leave the ear and the soil, going down about four inches to pupate. Two weeks after entering the soil the transformation is completed, the worm that went down comes up as a moth.

Egg and Moth Cycle Covers Forty Days.

The life cycle, egg to moth, is completed in about forty days. The brood that attacks the corn silks is the second brood of the season. The moths are strong fliers, and may go considerable distances from their birthplace in search of new fields. No satisfactory method of destroying the corn Ear-worm has been devised. Deep fall ploughing to destroy the last brood of the season is in part successful. If all land owners would practice a general clean up and deep ploughing of all stalks in the autumn this pest would be reduced considerably. With many neglected areas scattered through the country a sufficient area this insect's presence will be felt for some time.

Date of Planting a Factor In Control.

The date of corn planting is a factor of importance in escaping Ear-worm injury, with the probable date of the second brood of moths emergence, being known with fair accuracy, the planting may be done at a time to insure the corn ears being developed beyond the green silk stage before the moths of the second brood appear. The early planted corn has suffered less injury than the late.

Deep Autumn Ploughing Recommended.

Deep autumn ploughing of all land not in crop, the cleaning up of all materials that shelter insect life, the use of early ripening varieties of corn, early planting on well prepared land at dates well calculated to miss the major portion of the egg laying moths, are ways of reducing the probable injury from Corn Ear-worm.—L. Stevenson, Secretary Dept. of Agriculture, Toronto.

Horse's Efficiency Depends on Ration.

One of the factors that materially affects the efficiency of the work horse especially in hot weather is the feed he receives and the manner in which he receives it. In order that a horse may do a full day's work regularly throughout the summer months and yet maintain a presentable condition he must be fed just about to his full capacity. In order to do this and not injure his health, care and judgment must be exercised in the selection of feeds needed.

The feeds best suited to form the principal components of the ration are good bright clean timothy or upland prairie hay and bright, clean, sound oats. The average horse weighing 1,500 pounds will require about 20 pounds of hay and 22 to 24 pounds of oats a day.

There is a wide variation in feed requirements of different horses of the same weight however. Some do not have the capacity to consume and digest that much feed, and must be fed less even though doing a result they could be expected to work so hard, while others commonly spoken of as easy feeders will keep up and do well on a little less feed than the prescribed amount. The successful teamster or feeder will study the individuality of his horses and feed accordingly.

Horses that are handled quietly and patiently will do much more work and keep in better condition on a given amount of feed than will horses that are abused and continually kept nervous and in fear of the driver.

The ration given above can be improved upon by using one feed per day of good, bright, clean alfalfa or clover hay by substituting bran for about 15 to 20 per cent. of the oats used. The grain feed should be replaced by a bran mash or feed of boiled barley or boiled oats on Saturday evening. The daily grain allowance should be reduced by about one-third on Sunday. Corn can be used in place of oats to constitute one half of the grain ration, though straight corn is conducive to sides, and there are many entirely kilted plaited skirts, and the box plaits are favored.

Panel effects in skirts are numerous, and some blouses like the effect of a flared skirt. Though skirt lengths for morning wear vary considerably, it may be said in general that they remain of sufficient shortness to be practical. The plainer the suit, the shorter the skirt is a good and general rule. The circular cut is not much favored, though here and there some designer has used it, especially in frocks of draped tendencies, which often have an effect of circular flare at the side.

ROSE CLOTH, CREPE DE CHINE

Again with Pleasure we Invite the Women of Napanee and Vicinity to which event will revival the Newest Styles and the Newest Fabrics for the present Autumn and Winter Season.

OPENINGS WILL BE HELD IN OUR STORE ON FRIDAY AND SATURDAY, SEPT. 8 AND 9 1922

Each Department will be in gala attire for this noteworthy event, and the splendor of the wonderful collections which we have assembled for your approval speaks volumes for all parties concerned.

One writer of style claims, "that in Spain, a gorgeous scarf draped around a slender dancing girl caught fashion's fancy." In Russia she jotted down a peasant sleeve. In Egypt she coveted the low sparkling girdle once worn by a queen.

Into fashion's trunk went all these lovely things with gorgeous fabrics and luxurious furs. Under nimble fingers form was given to inspirations, and now on "OPENING DAYS" you are privileged to examine these magnificent creations.

AUTUMN MILLINERY

Never before have we been able to offer so much sheer beauty in millinery styles, never before has there been such a wealth of gorgeous rich colorings, never so daring or pleasing color and fabric combinations. This season each model seems to stand right out as an individual creation, so different are they in style and trimming. "The large hat is here," is the cry of one house, while another, equally as authentic, favors the smaller sizes. Dashing bow mounts and many ornaments are used on small hats, while their large companions with their high crowns and drooping brims, have wonderful backgrounds for hand embroideries. Fashion enthusiastically endorses the use of metal fabrics and metal ornaments. Beautiful deep colorful velvets applied to shapes in quilted effects produce truly wonderful results.

Browns and the various "wood" shades are "first" in fashion's fancies, yet Black, Navy Blue, Green, King's Blue, and Poinsette Red are equally as attractive.

AUTUMN SUITS

Indeed lucky will be the woman who must purchase a suit this Fall. Fashion creators and designers have left nothing to be desired in the way of style and beauty. Slim and straight is the new mode. An illusion of height is created by every conceivable feat of designing, and it carries with it a dignity which is pleasing and graceful. Suit Coats are longer, many are below the knee. Thus skirts are forced longer to be in harmony and proportion. Tailored effects are produced by notched reveres, by long waist lines and narrow belts. Shoulders cling snugly while sleeves are wonderfully narrow. Embroideries in most artistic arrangements are used for ornamentation. Furs are also used for collars. Navy Blue and Brown are the prevailing shades.

AUTUMN WAISTS

Are much needed to wear with Suits and Separate Skirts. These usually come in slip-on models and finished in numerous over the skirt styles. Beads and wool embroidery furnish the means of ornamentation. Crepe and Georgette are well represented. Generally speaking the necks are collarless and the outline may be a shallow square, the familiar bateau or the pointed opening.

AUTUMN DRESSES

In perfect accord with the lengthened, slim figure is the use of the drapery in dresses, particularly is this true when the material is silk, or one of the many fashionable Crepes. Usually the folds are caught at the hip, and let fall below the hem of the skirt which creates the uneven hem effect. The intricacies of draping are not easy to describe, but are easy to look upon especially when a masterhand has created them. The low waist line is most essential in this type of dress. Possibly this is indicated by the use of heavy twisted rope girdle, a heavy cord girdle, or a belt of steel or silver links. Sleeves of all kinds are graceful, but some are used to better effects in different types of dresses. In wool dresses the long, snug fitting sleeves are as correct as the loose flowing lines found in gowns of crepe, and faille. Navy Blue, Brown, Beige and Black are receiving most popularity at present.

AUTUMN MATERIALS

Are vast and seemingly endless in color and variety. One seeking individuality will have no trouble in making her selections, whether it be for dress, suit, coat or waist. The richness of the autumn colorings is second only to the indescribable richness of various qualities obtainable.

For Dresses—Materials listed under these names come well regarded, Crepe Canton, Crepe-de-Chene, Satin Reine, Crepe Velette, Broche Satin, Satin Charmeuse and Duchess Satin.

For Suits and Street Frocks are Tricotines, Poiret Twills, Velours, Serges, Broadclothes, Homespuns and Tweeds.

For Coats and Wraps are deep piled Marvella Cloths, Velours, Duvetyns, Normandies, Tweeds, and Blanket Cloths.

For Evening Wear come the laces in the plain colors and in the two-toned combinations. These are used over plain crepe foundations to procure most striking results. Metal laces, noticeably in silver, are here in abundance. Fringe and tassels are also here to stay.

AUTUMN COATS

The winter's coats follow the straight lines of the season more or less, except the wrappy models with their waistline armholes. All of these styles appear to be wider in the middle and narrower at the hem. These large sleeves also produce a cape effect which is most graceful. Fur collars are used on practically every garment, while on those of more extreme, nature fur is seen on cuffs and pockets as well. The low waistline is emphasized in coats as well as dresses, metal clasps and buckles are used as well as buttons for fastenings. This season the linings are as important as the materials themselves which are most sumptuously rich and beautiful. Deep pile fabrics with "bloom like peaches" are favored by the best of manufacturers. All of the brown shades are sponsored.
